Mr. Bryant's Statement.

Referring to the criticism that the structure he planned could not be erected for $200,000, the amount asked for, Mr. Bryant said yesterday:

"It has been said that the building by my plans cannot ne erected within the appropriation. I have an estimate from one of the largest and most responsible contractors in the South showing that the building by these plans can be built for $187,000, and I can demonstrate the correctness of these figures to any intelligent, unbiased mind.

"In arriving at the cost of a building from sketches and from descriptive specifications, all architects and contractors have to consult with brick masons, stone masons and all other sub-bidders for the different branches of the work.

"There has been some criticism of the style of architecture I used in my sketch. If the critics will look about in other large cities, they will see that I have not adopted a style unsuitable for school architecture. There is a tendency to adopt a distinct style of architecture for high school buildings all over the country, and these buildings, when completed, are magnificent and imposing in effect and do not appear severe or military-like, as some claim.

"The impression doubtless is made on "The impression doubtless is made on those unfamiliar with drawings by the entire absence of any background or coloring. This was done in keeping with the request of the joint committee, and mine is purely an architectural sketch. The Morris High School, New York; the James E. Yeatman and William McKinley High School, St. Louis and the Madison High School, Madison, Wis., are some of the notable buildins of this style."

The matter is certainly creating a great deal of talk and apparently it is far from a final settlement at this time.

Georgia, in his annual address, recommended that the Church in Georgia be divided into two dioceses, a line being bowed heads for a moment. Colonel Harwood said in part:

"Amid the rush of business and festivities of this convention, it may seem strange to some that we should speak of the dead. Why dim the brightness of this joyous occasion, by referring to events which have pierced hearts with angulsh and draped homes in the weeds of mourning? Why not let the dead of mourning? Why not let the dead past bury its dead, and turn our faces to the future? It is, not difficult to answer the question to the satisfaction of any man who is capable of appreciating high and noble sentiment. It will detract neither from the business interests or the social pleasures of this meeting to pause for a moment and reflect on the virtues and deeds of our fallen contrades.

The Memorial Services.

"The utility of memorial services is sometimes questioned. The man who conceives it to he his special duty to magnify the practical and to deery anything that has in it the semblance of sentiment, is sure to be heard from. What benefit can we derive from reviving mournful recollections and bestowing entilled the sentiment of the control of the tranks of life and into the oblivion of the grave? I might say that, in answer, much of the literature of the world is commemorative. What is history but an extended memorial of the world is commemorative. What is history but an extended memorial of the world's heroes and thinkers?

"I have only time to make a passing allusion to a few of the comrades who, during the year, have gone from us to join the great assemblage of disembodied spirits. I speak of Virginius Newton, of my own State of Virginius hecause of my intimate association with him. He was eligible to membership, not because, he was a banker, but a manufacturer. He was one of the largest stockholders of the people of his city than did Virginius Newton. This confidence he was the very soul of honer. As Colonel Harwood called the names of the dend for the last year, the members of the dead for a moment with bowed heads, a tribute to the memory of the dead.

"If I should say that everything dies, and in the next breath declare that nothing dies, there would be no contradiction. This is one of God's mysteries, and if we do not understand it, we have made but little progress in Divine wisdom. There is docuy and death in all things, and there is in all things imperishable life. This truth a sincerbed everywhere on the face of nature. Where are the leaves that bedecked the landscape and gardens less than eaght months ago? They are dead—the leaves and the flowers that bedecked the infinite in the season of the dead of the trees and plants still live, and to-day are shedding a fragrance and perfume which fill the air and remind us of the good and the beautiful they were last year. The tree and the plant live on, and with each return of spring there is life and an awakening from the long sleep of winter—more beautiful and more radiant than ever.

"Our departed dead are about us to-day," a great crowd of witnesses. We do not see them because a vell of flesh intervenes; but they see us. They rejoice in all our laudable successes and in our growth and every manly virtue. Let us recognize their presence; let us affectionately salue them, and let is honor them by diligently cultivating all those qualities of heart and mind which made them worthy of our respect and escent.

"Let this Joyous reunion of the living remind us of the infinitely happier re-

The report here goes on to state that of the expenses, $7,937.69, should have been reported to the Springfield Convention and charged to the last administration. This done, the cost of the present administration, which has been called the most expensive in the history of the organization, would be $47,221.16, a per capita of $1.88.8 against a per capita of the last administration of $2.12. There was long applause when Mr. Labeaume completed his long and carefully prepared report, and many of the delegates cheered wildly and waved their hands, showing that the secretary and treasurer had many friends. The report was received and referred to the appropriate committee, with instructions to have printed the comparative figures contained therein, which will to-morrow be circulated among the delegates.

At this point a report was submitted awarding to North Carolina the horns of the greatest increase in membership during the year, the percentage being 159. The figures for Virginia show that there was now 1,361 members of the organization in that State, an increase of 101. The report of the National Board of Directors was submitted by W. H. In effect the report declares that the reform contemplated will come and no cry that it is a form of socialism will ery that it is a form of socialism will stop it. The report then tells of efforts, not altogether successful, to secure a satisfactory bankrupt law; tells of a bill to be introduced in the next Congress to investigate the causes of railroad accidents, and warns the association to be on the alert regarding the pending parcels postage bill, the passage of which would threaten the very existence of the commercial travelors as a class. In closing attention was called to the danger to the country from the practically unrestricted immigration.

The convention honored Colonel Harwood by adopting his report and ordering it printed.
